

HikingtheOzarks.com

December 2010

Featuring: The Meridian 75

URL: <http://tinyurl.com/28orucx>

The Osprey Meridian 75 convertible wheeled system is designed for today's adventurous flashpacker. Sometimes you need both luxury and gritty necessity on your travels and the Meridian gives you these and so much more. Its travel durable fabrics, smooth wheels, and lightweight construction lend you a certain amount of freedom, while you easily glide in and out of the crowds with your wheeled luggage and then promptly switch it to your back to get to your off-the-beaten-path destination. When transferring the luggage to your back, you can easily maneuver both the hip belt and the shoulder straps to your personal preference and comfort in just a matter of seconds, and always on the move. For your excursions into the city or just off the trail, the incredibly easy zip off daypack is available immediately to hold the necessary contents of your chosen side trip.

When planning my adventure to Europe, I knew I was in need of a pack that could take me just about anywhere, as I had yet to really grasp where I was going. The selling point for me was the sheer amount of space you get in a compact / practical setting. The Meridian's organizational qualities allowed for me to roam freely around Europe alone for almost a month and look as though I had just stepped off the plane every day.

The Meridian has it all in terms of pockets and / or organizational components. The extra large polyurethane wheels with sealed bearings really helped me navigate many an airport. I found the suspension system in the harness and hipbelt to be very superior to just your average backpack luggage. As I have not used my Meridian to go on any kind of trekking adventure, I was fortunate enough to meet a girl my age in Chile on the Paine Circuit who was using her Meridian (minus the daypack) to backpack one of the most notorious routes known in the outdoor world. This pack is my go-to pack for all of my travelling. It has everything I could want in a luggage, backpack, and daypack. The design is very attractive and appealing (even with all of my coveted patches sewn all over it). This is a must-have for the active, unpredictable traveler.

