

FreshAirJunkie.com

January 7, 2011

Featuring: The Xenon 70

URL: <http://tinyurl.com/4pekgs5>

Osprey's Xenon 70 backpack for women is ahead of the pack with its precise fit! Hiking through the back country, we discovered how capable the Xenon 70 backpack is in providing not only customization of comfort, but also in its compartmental design. No need to purchase a day pack and overnight loader, Osprey used every opportunity to provide quality optimization in one design.

Osprey's water resistant Ultralight Nylon fabric allowed expansion of packing items, so we filled her up for several days! Load straps give you flexibility to expand the pack for bulky items, and, more importantly, to cinch down the pack load so gear doesn't jiggle around while on the trail. Extra straps at the base of the pack allow for additional gear, such as ice ax and crampons to be lashed away as well. You have a vertical zip access into main body that allows you to reach your cooking items without having to take out everything up top. There is a two-way zippered access to items stored at the base. A quick zippered access is also available on the large side pocket where an elastic band inside keeps the water bottles secured. Additional stretch woven front and side pockets accommodated us in allowing accessible items to be stored. A great backpack design begins with a proper frame, and the Xenon 70 sure has a solid foundation. A nice feature is the well padded shoulder straps that form to your body. The Xenon 70 comes with a The AquaSource Recurve which clips into the pack to carry your hydration bladder vertically down the backpanel or across the top of your load for a steady water supply throughout the day. The fabric is tough, pliable, and performs well with temperature fluctuations.

The Xenon 70 is also available in a Pacific blue and retails around $349.00. This pack works great for women. Not only out in the back country, but also on short romps. The Osprey Xenon 70 is a sleek design with smart specifications and compatibility that all work together to make this a pack that will be around for many outdoor adventures. Xenon is a wonderful approach pack when loaded with gear for a day hike up to a peak bag.

