

WildJunket.com

March 21, 2012

Long-Term Travel with Osprey Packs

Featuring: Waypoint 65 and Meridian 28"

Monthly Traffic: 7,354

URL: <http://tinyurl.com/865krz6>

The Osprey Waypoint travel backpack almost carries like a backcountry backpack, with excellent features to make it comfortable to carry even when packed to the brim. Its Ergo Pull hip belt keeps the load comfortably on my hips so even when I've got my daypack attached. With a tough frame that keeps the backpack together, this backpack also functions like a suitcase and can be opened completely with just one zip, making it easy to pack and unpack on a daily basis.

I chose this particular backpack mainly for the easy access, sturdy frame as well as its lightweight. Unlike the standard backcountry backpack, the Waypoint can be accessed completely with just one zipper, just like a suitcase. I used to hate digging up stuff from the bottom of my backpack just because it can only be accessed from a top loader. I love how my daypack fits all my electronics – from laptop to charger, iPhone, underwater camera, notebook and magazines. Thanks to that, I'm able to carry everything within the entire backpack with the daypack attached – no excess baggage in hand. The Waypoint features an alloy frame and torso adjustable harness exactly like a well-designed backcountry backpack. I'm really impressed by how comfortable the backpack feels even when loaded to the maximum capacity. This is definitely an extremely comfortable backpack to be traveling around the world with and I'd highly recommend it to anyone who's planning to travel long term.

The Osprey Meridian features a large panel zip, a daypack, retractable ergonomic handle and polyurethane wheels with sealed bearings. The main pack volume is 55L while the daypack has a capacity of 20L. I chose this bag because I like both the convenience of a trolley and the versatility of a backpack and the Meridian combines the best of both worlds. I find the daypack to be perfect for storage of all my electronics and important documents so I can carry them with me on the plane, bus, etc. The external toiletries pocket: This thing is amazing, it's so simple yet so convenient. This is, hands down, the best travel bag I've ever owned, and with the Osprey's lifetime warranty, it may just be the last one I'll have to use.

