

Women's Running

May/June 2010

Keep Cool

Featuring: The Raptor 6

Circulation: 90,000

Readership: 270,000

Fuelbelt Helium Pink Belt, $46

With a name like Helium, you can expect this sports belt to be lightweight. The elastic belt stretches to fit your contours, while the Thermofoam rear pad wicks away moisture when your run heats up. With strap-ins for four 8-ounce bottles, you'll have plenty of options for hydration. The Fuelbelt Helium's pink design (it also comes in other colors) makes it a stylish addition to your workout wardrobe. fuelbelt.com

Osprey Hydraulics Raptor 6, $79

The slim and efficient design of Osprey's Raptor 6 makes it a perfect companion for trail running and hiking. With its elastic sternum strap and mesh hip belt, this pack will stay in place without discomfort, no matter how rigorous the run. The 2-liter Nalgene/Osprey HydraForm reservoir (included) is designed to reduce sloshing and fit to your back while enhancing your water flow. ospreypacks.com

Nathan Women's Series Muse, $35

For those of us who can't seem to find the perfect fitting waist pack, Nathan's Muse is a fully adjustable solution. Designed specifically for a woman, the Muse will sit low and comfortably on your hips with its canted stretch waistband. This simple but sleek-looking belt comes equipped with a bottle and holster, plus two zippered pockets for all your small essentials. nathansports.com

Flexr Sports Bottle, $10

After several uses, conventional plastic bottles can become impossible to clean. However, throwing them away negatively impacts the environment. The solution? The Flexr Bottle, with disposable, biodegradable liners, ensures clean water every time. Ideal for running, this flexible bottle is easy to drink from and comfortable to hold. Protect your health and the environment with this eco-friendly alternative. flexrsports.com

