Just back from a trip exploring the Pyrenees, Matador managing editor Julie Schwietert Collazo recommends the following items when packing for a similar trip.

It wasn't easy to pack for the Catalonian Pyrenees; the hosts of the #inPyrenees blog trip wanted to keep the invited bloggers in suspense about the full itinerary, so I packed for nearly every type of scenario.

If I head back—and I sure hope to—these are the essentials I'd carry with me.

Osprey Shuttle 22"/40L Bag

I didn't actually take this bag to the Pyrenees (it arrived the day after I returned from the trip), but I wish I had.

I'm an Osprey loyalist and love all of their packs that I own, but the Shuttle is a wheeled bag, which makes my back a lot happier on a long-haul trip.

Like all Osprey bags, the Shuttle always seems to have just a little bit more room exactly when and where I need it, and the 22"/40L is still small enough to pass muster as a carry-on, foiling airline agents who'd love to charge me the checked bag fee.
