We Love, You Need: The Best Baby Slings, Carriers and Backpacks of 2012

Our parents reviewers put the newest carriers of 2012 to the test! Read on to find the carrier that's right for you (16 Photos)

The Osprey Poco Premium, part of Osprey's new child carrier line, has great ventilation and is easy to adjust. We love the detachable daypack of this deluxe model, which also has a changing pad, built-in sunshade and various compartments to carry everything from snacks to your cell phone.

Style: "My first impression? Sleek, light, functional and attractive." "It is very similar to a nice backpacking pack -- lots of straps and levels to adjust. It is easy to adjust to four torso sizes (xs-large)."

Comfort: "The material is very comfortable for both of us. It never got overly hot for me, and even when the warm weather comes, the mesh siding for the baby is awesome." "It fits like a high quality backpacking pack. The weight of the baby (and the stuff that you may be packing in the day pack), is all on your hips, so your legs (not your shoulders or back) are carrying the load for you."

Bonus: "My son is almost two, and he loves being in this thing, which is a huge perk for me. It was really easy to put him in and out. There are even stirrups for his feet to rest in when he gets a bit taller."

Price: $299

Made of: Ripstop nylon/polyester
