Didn't make it out to the largest bicycling trade show in North America? You aren't alone. Luckily reading about the latest and greatest cycling products is (almost) just as fun. About.com caught up with some of the manufacturers who made a splash at the show. Find out what Yakima, Osprey and Sharkies have been working on for 2014.

Osprey Rev Series and Hydraulics LT

Osprey's new Rev Series will become available in spring 2014. The streamlined, lightweight hydration packs, which were debuted at Interbike 2013, are ideal for both long bike rides and endurance racing. The packs have built-in features that make them easy to access while wearing. Specifically, the Biostretch™ body wrap harness and belt moves with the rider, and offers a fit that has been likened to a shirt rather than a backpack. The new Hydraulics LT Reservoir with built-in baffles comes standard in the Rev series. Additional features include a weather protective, quick access media pocket and expandable bottle harness pocket. Jeff Fox, bike marketing manager at Osprey, said that while the brand's latest innovative category is lightweight, it is able to carry all of the essentials. "Rev is perfect for the cyclist who doesn't want to stop. And, thanks to the series' intentional design that keeps gear and water easily accessible, they don't have to," he said in a press release. Available in Cirrus Grey, Flash Green and Bolt Blue. Rev 24, 18, 12, 6, 1.5 and Solo range from $40 - $130.

Osprey has expanded its Hydraulics™ Series with a new, sleek reservoir. The Hydraulics LT Reservoir will be available in spring 2014 and will be sold both separately and as part of the new Rev series. Best-suited for fast and light activities, the Hydraulics LT comes with a detachable hose for simple separation and quick refilling, and built-in baffles to help maintain the reservoir's shape.

Additional features include a three-quarter turn cap, low profile and magnetic bite valve. Available in 1.5 liter ($28) and 2.5 liter ($30).
