

A Waypoint Backpack for Ten Bucks?

PracticalTravelGear.com

December 2, 2014

A Waypoint Backpack for Ten Bucks?

Featuring: Waypoint 80 and Passports for Purpose

Monthly Traffic: 151,300

URL: <http://tinyurl.com/o3phyfh>

Yes, we recently reviewed the Osprey Waypoint 80 travel backpack so you're not seeing double. But Osprey Packs has teamed up with us this year to contribute a prize to Passports with Purpose.

About the Osprey Waypoint 80

We're happy to be teaming up with one of our favorite companies on this campaign. The Waypoint 80 is a travel classic and you'll see it on the backs of intrepid travelers almost anywhere in the world. It's got all the things you'd expect in a good travel pack: easy access without unpacking, two sets of compression straps/clips, and a removable daypack. This one is quite comfortable even when it's packed to the 80-liter limit, with myriad adjustments possible to the back panel, padded waist strap, and sternum strap. You get lots of padding in all the right places.

This backpack is guaranteed for life because that's how long it could last you. Even when it's being tossed on top of Indian buses and sat upon when hitching a ride on a pickup truck, it's not going to let you down. See my full review here.

Follow this link to go to the Passports with Purpose site. There you'll find loads of other great travel gear items to bid on, all for just $10 a pop. If you totally strike out, you've donated to a great cause in a time of year focused on nothing but consumerism. But hey, if you get lucky you could get something you really wanted for the holidays!

