The holiday season isn't too far away. And with Interbike, the cycling industry's largest trade show still a recent memory, new products — some small, some practical, some extravagant — abound.

Here are five memorable products to consider for the holidays, stocking-stuffers to special gifts. Or maybe you just decide to splurge on a gift for yourself, whether it's for the holidays or not.

Osprey Packs — There's a lot of competition in the casual wear and hydration pack market, but the 36-year-old independent Colorado company stands out. Its offerings are diverse, functional to fashion-oriented, high quality and with color options unmatched.

Osprey's new spring 2011 line is the pack for everyday use or for the avid commuter called the Momentum. It has 14 features, including a raincover, reflective print front panel and well-designed cluster of pockets, organizers and zippered compartments.

There's also the "front-loading" Flapjill pack for men and women and the Viper series for mountain biking and trail running which feature three-liter reservoirs and are available in some nifty colors, Supernova to Electric Sky to Thunder Cloud.
