

Outside

OutsideOnline.com

August 10, 2011

The Gear Shed Outdoor Retailer Wrap Up, Part II

Featuring: Poco Series

Monthly Traffic: 72,118

URL: <http://tinyurl.com/3vvdysz>

It's a wrap. The Outdoor Retailer Show in Salt Lake City is officially over, including its' pre and post demos and expos and events. We're still sifting through our notes and thumb drives, but here are a few more products from the world's largest gear orgy that caught our attention.

Osprey Poco: There are a lot of toddlers running around the Outside Magazine office these days. Which, naturally, means we've field-tested quite a few kid-carrying packs. But since Osprey makes some of our favorite regular packs, and it appears as is the Poco has all the features (and then some) we've come to expect on a top-of-the-line pack, we can't wait to test it out in the field. The Poco's shoulder straps adjust instantly and lock securely with a cam buckle, the hip belt strap and pads are adjustable, the sling seat your little one sits on moves up and down and the carrier rides slightly off your back so that there's some airflow. The whole thing is designed with an easy-to-use torso adjustment so that a mom who is 6'0" and a dad who is 5'7" (or vice-versa) can both carry the same pack. $199-$299, ospreypacks.com

