

Mountain Outlaw

Summer 2013

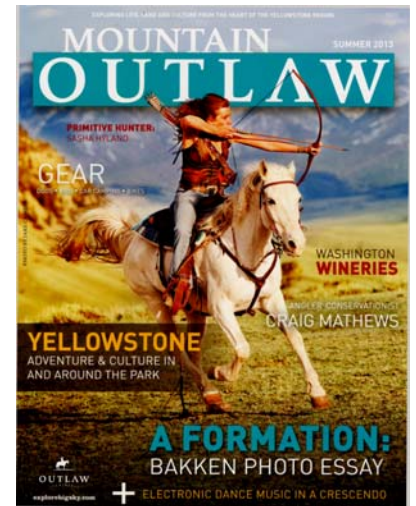

A Dad's Guide to Mountain Adventure with Little Ones

Featuring: Poco Plus

Circulation: 333,333

Readership: 1,000,000

A kid-carrying pack, like the Osprey Poco, is also clutch. I've loaded ours up with binoculars and scouted for elk in the high country, and wade-fished remote creeks with a kid in tow. Sometimes, I strap it to the Chariot, tow that behind my bike and ride to the trailhead. This winter, I hauled Max, skis and all, up the ski hill, and we skied down together. It's a great workout, and Max loves the attention. When my exertion dictates one-word answers

Pretty soon Max will be carrying Will in the Osprey Poco Pack.

3) Osprey Poco Plus Child Carrier

Luke hikes, Will sleeps.

This pack is amazing. From hauling a kid/ski/boot combo up Snow King, to hiking in Zion, this pack carries a load comfortably. The child harness is accessible and easy to adjust, and the waist belt and shoulder-zip pockets carry snacks at-the-ready for hungry kids. A hydration pouch slides into the rear compartment, and built-in tabs keep the drinking tube in place and accessible to the child. The pull-up sun-shade works well, and the fleecy covering on top of the pack is easy on the boys' chins and faces when they fall asleep. And Max loves using the foot stirrups (often referring to Luke as his horse). $259.00 ospreypacks.com

