Osprey Officially Opens New Distribution Center

Cortez, Colo. Osprey will officially open the doors to its new distribution center in Ogden, Utah, at the end of this month. Warehousing and shipping will operate out of the new facility while the pack brand's company headquarters will remain in Cortez, along with its sales, customer service, marketing, finance and quality assurance departments.

Osprey chose Ogden because of its proximity to the national rail network, which will allow it to improve shipping to retailers while reducing the brand's carbon footprint (since it won't need to rely on trucks as much). About 23 people will work there, some transfers from Cortez, and some will be local hires.
